

Anatol -

Unfortunately, I do not remember the source of my information or many details but I read someplace recently about an American Cultural Institute and made a note of the address which is 612 Mt. Pleasant Street, Greensburg, Pennsylvania. It reportedly has a "free international library", established to work with individuals, schools and television, and initiated a study of the Russian language in certain high schools. The Institute reportedly receives magazines and newspapers from various government and private presses from all over the world, which it shares with schools and individuals interested in the study of languages, culture, history and people.

It occurred to me you might want to send to the Institute some of your literature, or drop them a note asking whether there would be any interest in it. I wish I knew more about it, but I do not. You may already know all about it. However, you might find it a source for distributing some of your literature, if the Institute conducts any kind of exchange program with foreign institutes.
